- Strengthening Health Systems in Developing Countries Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: International Development Committee, 2014-09-12 Better health is a basic human right and an end in itself A healthy population is also essential to development Recent years have seen some rapid improvements in health partly driven by the Millennium Development Goals and the large international funds set up to accelerate progress towards them However these improvements have at times been achieved despite the poor state of health systems in many developing countries Stronger health systems will be required to ensure efficiency tackle growing challenges such as non communicable diseases and progress towards self sufficiency DFID has long had a good reputation for health system strengthening and this is reflected in its own work But DFID now relies on international partners which do not all share this reputation in an increasing number of countries and to manage an ever greater proportion of its expenditure We recommend that DFID reviews in each country whether its funding arrangements enable its health systems strengthening objectives to be met Assessing the effectiveness and value for money of health system strengthening work by DFID and its international partners is more difficult than it ought to be Expenditure and performance figures are not published and the research base is inadequate This must change The UK has one of the best health systems in the world but DFID makes only limited use of it We call on DFID to work with the NHS in expanding volunteering schemes for doctors and nurses and making more use of NHS finance and management skills

A Fair Deal on Talent - Fostering Just Migration Governance Bertelsmann Stiftung, 2015-05-12 If well managed migration generates benefits for migrants their countries of origin and the countries they settle in For migrants it can help them expand their skill sets and improve their standard of living For destination countries it can alleviate demographic pressures and foster cultural diversity For origin countries it can bring benefits associated with remittances and knowledge transfers However in reality these benefits are rarely achieved as migration policy failures frequently lead to suboptimal or even negative outcomes Realizing the full potential of migration therefore demands we foster a paradigm shift toward the fair management of migration Fair migration is driven by the desire to achieve a triple win for migrants destination countries and origin countries In addition to outlining the key challenges and opportunities associated with fair migration this volume examines the good practices of a variety of countries and institutions which highlight aspects of fair migration The volume concludes with policy recommendations for effective and fair migration policymaking at the national and international levels As a conceptual and empirical contribution to both national and international debates on managing migration this volume aims to enrich discussions among policymakers business leaders civil society actors and scholars alike
