

Introduction

Background and Objectives

The purpose of this study is to investigate the effectiveness of a new educational program designed to improve student learning outcomes. The program, known as the "Innovative Learning Model" (ILM), was developed by a team of educators and researchers. The study aims to evaluate the impact of the ILM on student performance, engagement, and retention rates. The research questions are: (1) Does the ILM significantly improve student learning outcomes compared to traditional methods? (2) How does student engagement change when using the ILM? (3) What factors influence student retention rates in the ILM?

The study was conducted over a period of 12 months, involving a sample of 150 students from a university. The data was collected through various methods, including pre-tests, post-tests, surveys, and interviews. The results of the study are presented in the following sections, discussing the effectiveness of the ILM and the factors that contribute to its success.

The study was designed to be a quasi-experimental study, comparing the ILM to a control group. The control group consisted of students who followed the traditional curriculum. The ILM group was divided into three sub-groups, each receiving a different version of the ILM. The data was analyzed using statistical methods, including t-tests and ANOVA. The results show that the ILM significantly improved student learning outcomes, engagement, and retention rates compared to the traditional curriculum.

Methodology

The study was conducted using a quasi-experimental design. The participants were divided into two groups: the experimental group, which received the ILM, and the control group, which received the traditional curriculum. The data was collected through pre-tests, post-tests, surveys, and interviews. The results of the study are presented in the following sections, discussing the effectiveness of the ILM and the factors that contribute to its success.
