Hunt, Mai Musié, 2018-08-09 Despite their removal from England's National Curriculum in 1988 and claims of elitism Latin and Greek are increasingly re-entering the mainstream educational arena. Since 2012 there have been more students in state maintained schools in England studying classical subjects than in independent schools and the number of schools offering Classics continues to rise in the state maintained sector. The teaching and learning of Latin and Greek is not however confined to the classroom; community based learning for adults and children is facilitated in newly established regional Classics hubs in evenings and at weekends in universities as part of outreach and even in parks and in prisons. This book investigates the motivations of teachers and learners behind the rise of Classics in the classroom and in communities and explores ways in which knowledge of classical languages is considered valuable for diverse learners in the 21st century. The role of classical languages within the English educational policy landscape is examined as new possibilities exist for introducing Latin and Greek into school curricula. The state of Classics education internationally is also investigated with case studies presenting the status quo in policy and practice from Australasia, North America, the rest of Europe and worldwide. The priorities for the future of Classics education in these diverse locations are compared and contrasted by the editors who conjecture what strategies are conducive to success. Knowing History in Schools Arthur Chapman

, 2021-01-07 The knowledge turn in curriculum studies has drawn attention to the central role that knowledge of the disciplines plays in education and to the need for new thinking about how we understand knowledge and knowledge building. Knowing History in Schools explores these issues in the context of teaching and learning history through a dialogue between the eminent sociologist of curriculum Michael Young and leading figures in history education research and practice from a range of traditions and contexts. With a focus on Young's powerful knowledge theorisation of the curriculum and on his more recent articulations of the powers of knowledge, this dialogue explores the many complexities posed for history education by the challenge of building children's historical knowledge and understanding. The book builds towards a clarification of how we can best conceptualise knowledge building in history education. Crucially it aims to help history education students, history teachers, teacher educators and history curriculum designers navigate the challenges that knowledge building processes pose for learning history in schools. Education under Siege Mortimore, Peter, 2013-09-23

At a time when education is considered crucial to a country's economic success, recent UK governments have insisted their reforms are the only way to make England's system world class. Yet pupils are tested rather than educated, teachers bullied rather than trusted and parents cast as winners or losers in a gamble for school places. Education under siege considers the English education system as it is and as it might be. In a highly accessible style, Peter Mortimore, an author with wide experience of the education sector both in the UK and abroad, identifies the current system's strengths and weaknesses. He concludes that England has some of the best teachers in the world but one of the most muddled systems. Challenging the government's view that there is no alternative, he proposes radical changes to help all schools become good schools. They include a system of schools receiving a fair balance of pupils who learn easily and those who do not ensuring a more even spread of effective teachers as well as banning league tables outlawing selection opening up faith schools and integrating private schools into the state system In the final chapter he asks readers who share his concerns to demand that the politicians alter course The book will appeal to parents education students and teachers as well as everyone interested in the future education of our children
