

The Science Writing Guide

When you think about “doing science,” there are things that often come to mind: all day, 5x/week studying, attending lab, all homework, attending classes, and all being presentable. Although these are certainly important aspects of the scientific endeavor, they are not science. What other science activities are there, and what are not? Contributed to by the public, scientists communicate with each other and with the public through posters, talks at conferences, and papers. And when participating in BSCI 111, you will be communicating your knowledge with your friends, peers through your report of scientific activity and presentation activities as well.

Scientific writing is fairly straightforward when it comes to the basic outline that the “science writing” subcommittee has constructed. However, some additional rules for our scientific format for this course are given. For the most part, they compare their presentation papers to papers with the scientific method.

The laboratory reports for BSCI 111 follow scientific report format used by many professional scientific journals. It includes a necessary introduction, procedure, data, results, and discussion. However, and for other, some of the experiments described in this course are specific to guide you. You should know at least what is meant when comparing the different components of your laboratory and your paper.

Lab Report Format and Style Guide

Professional scientific journals require every author to follow their particular format exactly, and usually use a computerized program to check manuscripts and submit the content to their peer review system.

BSCI 111 follows the format of the laboratory report papers used in the course. However, for this course, we have modified the format to be more flexible. For the most part, you should follow the format of the scientific writing guide.

General Format

1. Title page: Title, author, and date.
2. Abstract: Summary of the paper, and date.
3. Page number: Number of the page.
4. Introduction: Summary of the paper, and date.
5. Materials and Methods: Materials, Methods, and Figures.
6. Results and Discussion: Results, Discussion, and Figures.
7. Conclusion: Summary of the paper, and date.

Length

Each report for this course should be approximately 10 pages long, including separate figure captions. The length of the paper should not be too long, depending on the results. For papers for the
