

Analysis of Brave New World Essay

Have you ever heard someone call a group of people, “sheep” or say that someone is “woke”? They are usually referring to those who are or are not being seduced and deceived by propaganda. Those who have for some reason or another been able to dissent and question the socially accepted norms. Written in 1931, Brave New World by Aldous Huxley is an intimate tale of a dystopian future where every detail of life in the main civilization is under the intense control of the accepted authority. The characters are controlled not by force and fear but by manipulation through suggestion and pleasure. The rulers have discovered that “all you need to do ... is teach people to love their servitude. The totalitarian rulers in Huxley’s book do this not by oppressing their citizens but by giving them exactly what they want, or what they think they want – which is basically sex, drugs and rock ‘n’ roll – and lulling them into complacency.”(McGrath) Psychological manipulation of the mass public by authoritative institutions, while an extremely effective way to control Huxley’s Civilization and to provide and maintain its stability, is deeply flawed in that it incorrectly assumes a blanket standard for the human psyche as exemplified in the characters of controller Mustapha Mond, citizen Bernard Marx, and outsider John “The Savage”.

Mustapha Mond is in a position of power in Huxley’s civilized world as one of only a few of the world’s Controllers. This is a position that he chose to take because he agreed with the concept that for the stability of civilization people’s happiness is better than their knowledge of the truth. Mond was one of the individuals that were able to free themselves from the psychological shackles of the civilization’s manipulative mental conditioning. Mond explains that he “was given the choice; to be sent to an island ... or to be taken on to the Controllers’ Council with the prospect of succeeding in due course to an actual Controllership.”(Huxley) Mond was happy knowing and understanding the truth but believed that most people wouldn’t be. He was confidently convinced that the vast majority of people could and would only be happy if they remained ignorantly in the dark to the truth.

Bernard Marx is an Alpha member of the civilization who works with the very conditioning programs that manipulate the people with propaganda. As an Alpha, Bernard is in the class of people with a higher intelligence. A class that generally seems to understand but is unconcerned that they are being manipulated. “Huxley’s dystopia is especially terrifying in that the enslaved population absolutely loves their slavery. Even the characters who are smart enough to know what is going on (and why they should be concerned) are instead content with everything that is happening. Perhaps more terrifying than other dystopian novels, in Brave New World there is truly no hope for change.”(Hendricks) Bernard fl
