

18.2 Modern Evolutionary Classifications

Learning Objectives

- LO1 Explain the difference between monophyletic, paraphyletic, and polyphyletic classifications.
- LO2 Distinguish between sister and outgroup relationships.
- LO3 Explain the use of DNA sequence in classification.

Learning Objectives

Evolutionary use of the classification: The study of evolutionary relationships among organisms is called phylogeny. A classification based on evolutionary relationships is called phylogenetic systematics or evolutionary classification.

- 1. Evolutionary classification places organisms into higher taxa based on shared traits that should reflect a taxon number more than that for members of any other group. The larger the more, the higher rank is that all of members sharing common ancestor.
- 2. In the system, organisms are placed into groups called clades. A clade is a group of species that includes a single common ancestor and all descendants of that ancestor. It does not include anything else. group that include all species that are descended from a common ancestor, and descendants are species that are not descended from that common ancestor.

Cladogram: A cladogram is a diagram that shows how species or higher taxa are related to each other. A cladogram shows three evolutionary traits or changes: synapomorphies, synapomorphies.

- 1. In cladograms, the place where the synapomorphies appear is called a node, or a node. Nodes represent the point where two things first shared a common ancestor.
- 2. The branches of the diagram, or the line, represent the evolutionary history of all the organisms in the cladogram.
- 3. Cladistics usually refers to species, but can also, in theory, be extended to populations or groups that exist in the past (most common ancestor of a particular clade) and are placed on all of the individuals.

How to Construct a Cladogram: All organisms have DNA. Because DNA is a stable source of information, the molecule can be compared to different species. In general, the more similar species (organisms) are, the more similar they are. The more similar the species, the more similar the species are. The more similar the species are, the more similar the species are.
