Pearcey, H.A. Mooney, P.W. Rundel, 2012-12-06 Physiological plant ecology is primarily concerned with the function and performance of plants in their environment Within this broad focus attempts are made on one hand to understand the underlying physiological biochemical and molecular attributes of plants with respect to performance under the constraints imposed by the environment On the other hand physiological ecology is also concerned with a more synthetic view which attempts to understand the distribution and success of plants measured in terms of the factors that promote long term survival and reproduction in the environment These concerns are not mutually exclusive but rather represent a continuum of research approaches Osmond et al 1980 have elegantly pointed this out in a space time scale showing that the concerns of physiological ecology range from biochemical and organelle scale events with time constants of a second or minutes to succession and evolutionary scale events involving communities and ecosystems and thousands if not millions of years The focus of physiological ecology is typically at the single leaf or root system level extending up to the whole plant The time scale is on the order of minutes to a year The activities of individual physiological ecologists extend in one direction or the other but few if any are directly concerned with the whole space time scale In their work however they must be cognizant both of the underlying mechanisms as well as the consequences to ecological and evolutionary processes Environmental Science Michael L.
