The approach to searching the literature follows a fairly simple, but often less than ideal, pattern. If you are planning to write your contribution to a paper or to the book, it may be useful to search for relevant literature first. This can be done by searching the literature for relevant papers or books. The search results are then used to identify relevant papers or books. The search results are then used to identify relevant papers or books.

4. However, if you want to take advantage of the integral relationship and enter your students for the ALE at the end of the first year, then you are unlikely to have time to cover the Clark and Colman papers unless the entry topic is the syllabus. The syllabus covers skills in knowledge, application, analysis and evaluation. It is important to focus not only on the subject content but the skills and to spend time on the skills that candidates are required to demonstrate. The full examination gives a larger weighting on the skills of knowledge and application, whereas the A level papers (Paper 1 and Paper 2) place a greater emphasis on the more challenging skills of analysis and evaluation. It is important that the first year of the course has a focus on the skills of knowledge and application. The second year focus on more challenging skills (analysis and evaluation) and also focus on the skills of knowledge and evaluation which are more common skills than those of knowledge and analysis.

NOTE: The A.1 section (Paper 3 and Paper 4) for reading both the same and extended syllabus is only for reference.
