Coherence in Large-scale Multiprocessors Lynn Choi, Pen-Chung Yew, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Department of Computer Science, 1996 Abstract In this paper we study a hardware supported compiler directed HSCD cache coherence scheme which can be implemented on a large scale multiprocessor using off the shelf microprocessors such as the Cray T3D The scheme can be adapted to various cache organizations including multi word cache lines and byte addressable architectures Several system related issues including critical sections inter thread communication and task migration have also been addressed The cost of the required hardware support is minimal and proportional to the cache size The necessary compiler algorithms including intra and interprocedural array data flow analysis have been implemented on the Polaris parallelizing compiler 33 From our simulation study using the Perfect Club benchmarks 5 we found that in spite of the conservative analysis made by the compiler the performance of the proposed HSCD scheme can be comparable to that of a full map hardware directory scheme Given its comparable performance and reduced hardware cost the proposed scheme can be a viable alternative for large scale multiprocessors such as the Cray T3D which rely on users to maintain data coherence
