- Keywords: life satisfaction, population, aging, well-being, happiness. Abstract: This study aims to explore the factors that influence life satisfaction in the elderly population. The study was conducted using a cross-sectional design, involving 500 elderly participants aged 65 and above. Data was collected through a series of questionnaires that assessed various aspects of their lives, including health, social support, and financial stability. The results indicate that health status and social support are the most significant predictors of life satisfaction. The study also highlights the importance of addressing the needs of the elderly population to improve their overall well-being and quality of life.
