Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 10 women, 40 to 50 years of age, who were sedentary and had no cardiovascular or pulmonary disease. The subjects were randomly assigned to a 10-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise at 60% of maximum HR. The control group did not exercise. The subjects were monitored for HR and EE during the training program and at the end of the program. The results showed that the training program had a significant effect on HR and EE. The HR of the training group decreased significantly from 160 to 140 beats per minute (p < 0.05). The EE of the training group increased significantly from 1,800 to 2,200 kcal per day (p < 0.05). The control group did not show any significant changes in HR or EE. The results of this study suggest that a 10-week training program can improve the cardiovascular and metabolic health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial light or other light sources. To avoid this, there are two things the producer should do:
 - Turn off the lights at the end of the work day.
 - Use red light for night shifts, as the wavelength of this light may be less disruptive to the circadian rhythm. Red light has the longest wavelength and the lowest energy, so it is least likely to affect the circadian rhythm. Some studies suggest that the 660 nm (red) light may be the best choice for night shifts.

- When a producer's price for the output rises or falls, it must adjust its output level accordingly. For example, suppose the price for the output rises. The producer will want to produce more of the output, and this will require hiring more workers. The producer will also want to use more of the other inputs, and this will require hiring more of those inputs. The producer will also want to use more of the other inputs, and this will require hiring more of those inputs.
