Regional Mortality Differences in Germany Eva U.B. Kibele, 2012-10-02 Regional mortality differences are one dimension of health inequalities but its trends and determinants in Germany are widely unknown This book examines and illustrates patterns of regional mortality in Germany with focus on small area differentials and their changes over time It identifies explanatory factors at individual and regional level Mortality differences between eastern and western Germany exist but small area mortality differentials are often greater Though the main spatial mortality patterns remain this study provides evidence that some distinct changes in the small area mortality patterns in Germany especially among women occurred within a short period of time Mortality inequalities at younger ages and in behavior related causes as well as differences in socioeconomic conditions contribute strongly to regional mortality differences in Germany The book shows that the complex interplay between individual and regional level mortality risk factors requires a multidimensional approach to reduce regional mortality inequalities

Regional Mortality Disparities in Germany Eva Kibele,Sebastian Klüsener,Rembrandt Scholz,2014 While regional mortality inequalities in Germany tend to be relatively stable in the short run over the course of the past century marked changes have occurred in the country's regional mortality patterns These changes include not only the re emergence of stark differences between eastern and western Germany after 1970 which have almost disappeared again in the decades after Germany's unification in 1990 but also substantial changes in the patterns in northern and southern Germany By the end of the 19th century the northern regions in Germany had the highest life expectancy levels while the southern regions had the lowest Today this mortality pattern is reversed In this paper we study these long term trends in spatial mortality disparities in Germany since 1900 and link them with theoretical considerations and existing research on the possible determinants of these pattern Our findings support the view that the factors which contributed to shape spatial mortality variation have changed substantially over time and suggest that the link between regional socioeconomic conditions and mortality outcomes strengthened over the last 100 years
