unknown He ended up in Toronto Canada and became an academic In the early 1970s he met the person who radically changed his thinking R D Laing The book s longest chapter Journal Entries comes from notes Feldmar took in 1974 1975 when he studied with Laing in London He adds notes and remarks in the present to the past increasing the tension in the already fascinating passages Following this is the text of an important conversation with Laing covering topics such as love therapy and change Next is a paper by his lifelong friend Francis Huxley Shamanism Healing and R D Laing The book concludes with perhaps its most influential chapter Fantasy and Reality Here Feldmar speculates on the fundamental elements of his approach to psychotherapy the nature of responsibility and ethics politics freedom individuality community solidarity will and relationships The bond between Feldmar and Laing permeates every page of Credo The reader can closely follow Feldmar s remarkable journey of how their relationship shaped his therapeutic approach and helped him develop into the radical and inspirational psychotherapist he is today This book is essential reading for all psychotherapists psychoanalysts and fans of R D Laing
