Safety and health at work: The Robens Report

R. C. BROWNE

Nuffield Department of Industrial Health, University of Newcastle upon Tyne

The Committee on Safety and Health at Work was small, and its report is authoritative and laced with that massive common sense which only Lord Robens can dispense. Anybody who has seen him or listened to him on television or radio, or met him in the flesh, will have been impressed by this power. The medical member of the committee was Sir Brian W. Windeyer, a medical statesman in his own right, with very special knowledge of the environmental effects of ionizing radiations, recently supplemented by those of lead in his investigations of the Avonmouth Smelter (1972).

The report itself consists of approximately 80 000 words and the separate volume of selected written evidence 343 000 words. The Committee on Safety and Health at Work was appointed on 29 May 1970 'to review the provision made for the Safety and Health of persons in the course of their employment, other than transport workers, and to consider whether any changes are needed in the scope or nature of the major relevant enactments, or the nature and extent of voluntary action'. It was to consider, moreover, whether any future steps were required to safeguard members of the public from hazards which might arise from industrial or commercial activities and construction sites.

When a committee is set up, and particularly if it is an important committee like this one, it looks carefully at its terms of reference. Many committees are quite purposely kept to the straight and narrow because it seems inexpedient to let them stray in pastures which are too lush. Not, however, in this case, and the main thing to be noticed about these terms of reference is that they are broad. They cover the law, voluntary action, and damage to the public from things going on in industry.

Although there have been a number of committees which have studied segments of the subject, there has never, until Robens, been a comprehensive review by a single body.

The heading of the first chapter gives us the clue to the refreshingly cool intellectual breeze which blows through the whole document. This heading simply asks 'What is wrong with the system?' Here it is pointed out that about 1 000 people are killed per year in industry in the United Kingdom. But one reflects rather wryly that at least seven times as many are killed on the roads. British industry is probably the safest in the world, in so far as the figures may be considered comparable and within the limitations of their selection. This illustrates the paradox of the whole international field, in that the countries which are doing best are striving hard to do better still. As early as the bottom of the first page the committee hits its first nail on the head. It states frankly that the subject of safety is one which produces an apathetic response, and that many practical implications flow from this. The committee must therefore have realized what every experienced doctor working in the field of industrial medicine soon learns, that health and safety too often evoke a positive reaction from management only when they are either financially or emotionally frightened.

The defects of the statutory system are succinctly summarized by saying that there is too much law, and this point will be heartily applauded by all who get involved in legal medicine. One of the reasons why there is too much law is that every time a new technical situation arises an external agency imposes a new set of detailed rules. But one of the fundamental points in this document is that the primary responsibility for prevention lies with those who create the risks, i.e., the management and the men. The voice of practical experience of men in industry sounds clearly in the report when it states that there are distinct limits to bringing about better standards of safety and health through negative regulation. The conclusion seems to be that a more effective self-regulating system is required. These sentiments will be echoed by any doctor who has experience of
