Population dynamics is the study of the changes in the size and structure of a population over time.

The primary objectives of this lab are to understand the factors that influence population growth and to apply these concepts to real-world scenarios.

The lab will focus on the following topics:

Methods

The lab will use a combination of theoretical analysis and practical exercises to explore population dynamics.

The lab will also include a discussion of the implications of population dynamics for conservation and resource management.

Results

The results of the lab will be presented in a series of graphs and tables, showing the relationship between population size and time.

The graphs will show the population size over time for different initial conditions.

Discussion
