Samantha Edwards, 2017 This thesis focuses on four works John Fowles's The Collector and The French Lieutenant's Woman and A.S. Byatt's The Game and Possession A Romance The French Lieutenant's Woman and Possession have frequently been treated together in academic criticism as Possession was a deliberate response to the former I have extended this pairing because these four works are built around the idea of possession While most critical discussions consider the notion of possession as one theme among many, this thesis proposes that possession dominates the characterisations in these works The starting point for my argument is Jean Baudrillard's theory of possession as outlined in his chapter The System of Collecting Baudrillard proposes that possession cannot apply to an implement⁷ To possess an object, it must undergo an abstractive operation⁷ until it is divested of its function and made relative to a subject⁸ This thesis translates that subject-object relationship to characters where one character is the possessor, another the possessed While the possessive drive can take on multiple forms in these works, romantic, erotic, intellectual, and creative desires come to the fore The Collector and The Game involve a one-on-one dynamic The first is one man's attempt to romantically possess his female obsession, the second is one woman's attempt to creatively appropriate and possess her sister Both novels are preludes to the more complex examinations of possessive intent in the novelists' later work In The French Lieutenant's Woman, Charles Smithson undertakes an erotic and romantic quest to possess Sarah Woodruff Along with this is the socially possessed Ernestina Freeman The contemporary scholars in Possession all compete to intellectually and creatively possess the Victorian poets

Randolph Henry Ash and Christabel LaMotte The possessive parties in these works attempt to stabilise their projections under the delusion of reciprocity
