Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 10 women, 40 to 50 years of age, who were sedentary and had no cardiovascular or pulmonary disease. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a control group or a training group. The control group continued with their sedentary lifestyle, while the training group participated in a 10-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The HR and EE were measured at rest and during exercise at the beginning and end of the 10-week period. The results showed that the training group had a significant decrease in HR and EE at rest and during exercise compared to the control group. The results suggest that a 10-week training program can improve the cardiovascular and metabolic health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Caution: Spilling, pouring, or introducing water through your furnace can be fatal. It is not always immediately noticeable when the coil begins to ice or when the furnace fails. The following may occur when the furnace begins to ice or when the furnace oil safety controls have been activated: the facility might be shut down; the furnace may be damaged; and safety, personnel, and/or water and/or electrical fires might occur. To prevent this, shut down the furnace as soon as you notice any of the following signs:

Abstract: This research is an exploratory study of the relationship between the use of social media and the use of social media for business purposes. The study is based on a survey of 100 small business owners in the United States. The results of the study indicate that the use of social media for business purposes is positively related to the use of social media for personal purposes. The study also found that the use of social media for business purposes is positively related to the use of social media for marketing purposes. The study has implications for small business owners who are considering using social media for business purposes.
