By the early 1990s, however, it was clear that the economic benefits of trade and globalization, though real, had been unevenly shared. There had been problems, notably the collapse in value of the Latin American debt crisis, and a growing fear that globalization was the greatest threat to the welfare of the world's poorest countries. The World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) had been accused of imposing a policy of "shock therapy" on the economies of Latin America, which had led to a loss of jobs and a decline in living standards.
