

of their parents even without being taught. For example, children may be talkative just like their parents, smiley, excel in math, etc. There are cases when behavioral attributes are manifested even at a very young age. Such cases explain the role of heredity in the development of the child. Taking traits from parents is usually a psychological or behavioral concern, but as the nature debate confirms, heredity and environmental factors come into play in the development of a child.

There are always two sides of a coin in parenting beliefs. On one hand, parents who believe in the nature debate will do what is good for their baby even while the baby is inside the mother's womb. On the other hand, they may also think that having no abnormalities in the family lineage will result in having physically and mentally normal children. The nature debate supports the idea that children are predisposed to certain qualities that their parents manifest despite receiving different training. In this regard, the nature debate supports the entity belief (Dweck, 1999) that limits the qualities of a child. For example, parents who are good in mathematics may expect their children to be good in the subject, while those who are poor in mathematics may expect their children not to excel in the said subject. Thus, there are positive and negative sides as regards the nature debate. Parents who think that their child takes from them will easily understand their children and guide them well, provide support in areas of weaknesses, and so on. Similarly, parents who think that their children take from them their negative attitudes may either find it easier to understand those traits or set off attempts to make their children better. The existing literature confirms the role of heredity and environment in the development of a child regardless of age.
