Lesson Summary

Describing Populations

Area Studies Most biologists study populations. Ecologists study a particular community, often geographic range, which may change considerably over time.

Change after Change They give us a population's size, density, geographic range, all population changes occurring irregularly over time. For example, the population of bacteria in a flask doubles a certain time interval. They tell us the current size of a population of fish in a lake, and how the geographic range of a species is affected over time.

Growth Rate The number of organisms in a population change over time, in a regular time span. Population numbers can grow rapidly when resources are rich, but they can slow down when resources are scarce.

Key For your study, write the numbers for each stage, resources, and density, and explain how the rate changes.
