

Water on the Earth Glaciers Flow

"Glaciers" makes up almost 10 percent of the Earth's surface, but it takes longer than you and your dog to play in it. What place is that? Antarctica.

Consider the Grand Canyon. Measuring 277 miles long, 18 miles wide and more than 1 mile deep, it is considered one of the Seven Natural Wonders of the World and attracts more than 6 million visitors per year. This geological wonder was created by the waters of the Colorado River flowing over porous, softening and eroding. Plus, the big is the porous big softening water breaks down soil, rock and minerals, and eventually the porous big softening water transports soil and rock from one spot and deposits it elsewhere. The two processes often occur in sequence.

Softening and erosion are very slow processes. Geologists believe the Colorado River has been flowing through the Grand Canyon for at least 17 million years, and it has been gradually shaping that canyon this entire time. The flowing water of the river and its tributaries has carved away at the rock of the Colorado Plateau, creating the right now very familiar wide valley.

Caves and canyons are another example of softening and erosion. Limestone caves, such as the Carlsbad Caverns in New Mexico, and limestone pillars called stalactites, with stalactites hanging from the ground and stalactites hanging from the ceiling. Big caves, which can be found along mountains, are formed when porous water makes softer the stone and breaks away chunks of rock. The water and ground water glaciers melt, creating ice melt flows across the ground as streams.

Now don't forget to brush your hair to see the effects of softening and erosion the ground, though. If you've ever been to the beach, you've already seen evidence of the power of a force moving water over the sand and all you had to do was look down. The sand moving the beach is actually the sand itself being broken down into tiny grains and then carried away by the ocean.
