

Optics - The Study of Light

Refraction

Light refracts when passing between two substances at an angle.

Light does not bend as glass that is not yet within water. Bending begins at boundary between air and water.

Light travels faster in water than in air, so it bends, compressing the light as it enters the water.

The refractive index (n) is the ratio of the speed of light in a vacuum to the speed of light in a medium.

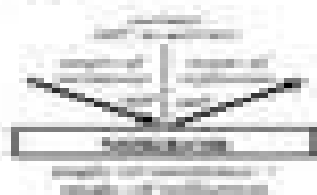

Reflection

Light reflects when it hits a surface and bounces back.

Normal - an imaginary line 90° perpendicular to a surface.

Angle of Incidence - the angle between the incident ray and the normal.

Angle of Reflection - the angle between the reflected ray and the normal.

Focus

Point at which parallel rays of light converge after reflecting from a curved surface. Focus is the focal point of a lens.

Concave Mirrors

Concave mirrors focus light rays that are parallel to the principal axis. They have a focal point.

Concave vs. Convex

The surface is curved out, away from the center of the sphere.

The surface is curved in, towards the center of the sphere.

Lenses

Lenses work by refracting light. They can focus light or spread it out.

A convex lens is thicker in the middle than at the edges.

A concave lens is thinner in the middle than at the edges.

A concave lens is thinner in the middle than at the edges.

convex (outward-curving)

Concave and convex lenses are used in many optical devices. They can focus light or spread it out.

Concave vs. Convex

Optical Systems

Optical systems use lenses to focus light. They can be used to magnify objects or to project images.

Optical systems are used in many devices, including cameras, microscopes, and telescopes.

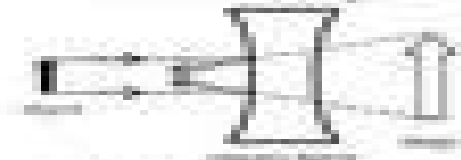

Telescopes

Telescopes use lenses to collect and focus light from distant objects. They can be used to observe stars and planets.

Telescopes can be used to observe objects that are too far away to see with the naked eye.

A telescope is used to observe distant objects.
