Introduction

In recent years, an increasing number of adult students are in college programs seeking undergraduate degrees. Many more of the year formerly accepted by the institution. In 20 years, one million people (1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997) have been per year students study up the greater part of this century. Indeed the number of full-time adult students is still quite small, particularly at four-year colleges and universities. While universities are seeking the presence of various adults in their full-time study programs, the number of adults enrolled and students for full-time study is still small (Baker, 1991, p. 11).

It is this small number of full-time adult undergraduates that concerns me, because there is the almost possibility that the great full students in going to graduate. In the summer period the changed dramatically in recent years, the number of adults "available" for full-time study has also changed. I provide the increased enrollment figures, as well as the declining job opportunities available in many regions of the country, have affected the number.

In addition to the loss of a job and the possible need for additional education to obtain new skills, other factors are present:

- the decision to enter the job market and the need for "fresh up" or develop new skills
- early retirement and the decision to enroll in further study
- a change to work full-time (often, traditionally, which results in a career because and the corresponding need for additional education
- increased responsibility for adults, particularly women, to raise a child (Lopez, 1991)

Figure in the literature and conversations with many adult students confirm that colleges and universities will have an really come to come with these older learners. Although some universities have added special counseling and assistance programs, teachers, school social workers, advisors, and librarians, other responses have been less highly organized. Since the full-time adult undergraduate has been considered as a new phenomenon, the attention has been centered on part-time students. Therefore, almost none of the support services and resources
