Phonetic knowledge can be assessed in three ways. First, phonograms, or letter-sets in American phonetic alphabets (e.g., ch, sh, ph), are used to represent the sound of a given segment. It is assumed that individuals who have been instructed in English use the English phonogram that better represents the given segment in their own language. Thus, the English phonogram ch is chosen by individuals who believe that the English phonogram better represents the sound of the given segment than the other phonogram. This method is used to assess the phonetic knowledge of individuals who have been instructed in English. Second, phonograms are used to represent the sound of a given segment in a given language. This method is used to assess the phonetic knowledge of individuals who have been instructed in English. Third, phonograms are used to represent the sound of a given segment in a given language.
