By the early 1990s, however, it was clear that the situation was not as bleak as it appeared. Although the unemployment rate had risen to 10.7 per cent, nearly 500,000 more of the other countries were doing better than the country that had the highest unemployment rate in the Group. Moreover, according to a pessimist in the International Monetary Fund, the picture of the European economy, although bleak at the time, was not as bleak as it appeared. The two problems that he saw were that the countries were going to have to deal with the effects of the recession and the fact that the countries were going to have to deal with the effects of the recession. The two problems that he saw were that the countries were going to have to deal with the effects of the recession and the fact that the countries were going to have to deal with the effects of the recession.
