The most significant impacts were on the world's marine fisheries, which experienced a sharp decline in catches. This was due to a combination of factors, including a shift in the location of the world's major fish stocks, a decline in the productivity of the world's major fish stocks, and a decline in the world's fish stocks.

The world's major fish stocks are located in the Pacific Ocean, and the 1997-1998 El Niño caused a shift in the location of these stocks.
