

A Bird with Many Beaks

Diagram representing the divergence of species, from Charles Darwin's On the Origin of Species.

When the famous naturalist Charles Darwin, who helped develop the theory of evolution, visited the Galápagos Islands in the 1830s, he made an interesting discovery about native birds. He noticed that 13 different species of finches were all very similar, but differed in the size and shape of their beak. Some of the birds had long, thin beaks, while others had short, thick ones; others still had shapes somewhere in between. Darwin hypothesized that these species all came from a common ancestor—a single species of bird that later evolved into the 13 distinct species he had observed. But how and why did this happen? Why did all the birds not have beaks of the same length?

Darwin noticed that each of the species occupied separate islands in the Galápagos. On each of these islands, the finches subsisted on different types of food. On one island, for example, they lived on grubs and other small insects, while on another, they ate fruits and nuts. Darwin then made an important connection between the shape of the finches' beaks and the kind of food they lived on. Each beak, he realized, was suited to their diet. Darwin observed that the finches with long, thin beaks lived in places where they had to reach between rocks to gather insects, while finches with thick, claw-like beaks lived on islands where they used their beaks to break open nuts.
