

Comparing Different Explanations of Emerging Diseases

Traditional

Biological Reductionism

Traditional reductionist explanations of emerging diseases focus on the biological processes and genetic mutations within individual organisms. This approach emphasizes the role of specific viruses, bacteria, or other pathogens in causing disease outbreaks.

For example, the 2019 Novel Coronavirus (COVID-19) is believed to have originated from a bat and spread to humans through an intermediate host, such as a pangolin or farmed mink.

Another example is the Ebola virus, which is believed to have originated in fruit bats and spread to humans through contact with infected animals or through human-to-human transmission.

Emerging Diseases as Global Phenomenon

Traditional explanations also emphasize the role of global trade, travel, and environmental factors in facilitating the spread of emerging diseases across borders.

For example, the H1N1 influenza pandemic of 2009 was believed to have originated in Mexico and spread to the United States and other countries through international air travel.

Similarly, the 2014-2016 Ebola outbreak in West Africa was believed to have originated in the Democratic Republic of Congo and spread to neighboring countries through the movement of people and goods.

Non-Biological Explanations

Non-biological explanations of emerging diseases focus on social, political, and economic factors that contribute to the emergence of new diseases.

For example, the HIV/AIDS pandemic is believed to have originated in sub-Saharan Africa and spread to the United States and other countries through the global sex trade and drug trafficking.

Similarly, the 2014-2016 Ebola outbreak in West Africa is believed to have been fueled by political instability, lack of access to healthcare, and poverty.

Other non-biological explanations include the role of climate change in creating favorable conditions for the emergence of new diseases, such as dengue fever and Zika virus.

Finally, some non-biological explanations focus on the role of bioterrorism and biowarfare in creating new diseases, such as smallpox and anthrax.

In conclusion, traditional explanations of emerging diseases focus on the biological processes and genetic mutations within individual organisms, while non-biological explanations focus on social, political, and economic factors that contribute to the emergence of new diseases.
