1. What is the purpose of the `main` function in a C program?
The `main` function is the entry point of a C program. It is the first function that is executed when the program is run. It is used to initialize variables, call other functions, and perform the main logic of the program.

2. How do you declare a variable in C?
A variable is declared by specifying its data type followed by the variable name. For example, `int x;` declares an integer variable named `x`.

3. What is the difference between a variable and a constant in C?
A variable is a memory location whose value can change during the execution of a program. A constant is a memory location whose value is fixed and cannot be changed during the execution of a program. Constants are declared using the `const` keyword.

4. How do you declare a constant in C?
A constant is declared by using the `const` keyword followed by the variable name. For example, `const int x = 10;` declares a constant integer variable named `x` with the value 10.

5. What is the difference between a local variable and a global variable in C?
A local variable is a variable that is declared within a function or a block of code. Its scope is limited to that function or block. A global variable is a variable that is declared outside of any function or block. Its scope is the entire program.

6. How do you declare a global variable in C?
A global variable is declared by placing the variable declaration outside of any function or block. For example, `int x;` declares a global integer variable named `x`.

7. What is the difference between a static variable and a non-static variable in C?
A static variable is a variable that is declared with the `static` keyword. Its value is retained between function calls. A non-static variable is a variable that is not declared with the `static` keyword. Its value is lost when the function call ends.

8. How do you declare a static variable in C?
A static variable is declared by using the `static` keyword followed by the variable name. For example, `static int x;` declares a static integer variable named `x`.

9. What is the difference between a pointer variable and a regular variable in C?
A pointer variable is a variable that stores the memory address of another variable. A regular variable stores a value directly. For example, `int *p;` declares a pointer variable named `p` that can store the address of an integer variable.

10. How do you declare a pointer variable in C?
A pointer variable is declared by using an asterisk (*) followed by the variable name. For example, `int *p;` declares a pointer variable named `p` that can store the address of an integer variable.

11. What is the difference between a pointer to a variable and a pointer to a constant in C?
A pointer to a variable is a pointer that can store the address of a variable. A pointer to a constant is a pointer that can store the address of a constant. For example, `int *p;` declares a pointer to a variable, and `const int *p;` declares a pointer to a constant.

12. How do you declare a pointer to a constant in C?
A pointer to a constant is declared by using the `const` keyword followed by the pointer variable name. For example, `const int *p;` declares a pointer to a constant integer variable named `p`.

13. What is the difference between a pointer to a function and a pointer to a variable in C?
A pointer to a function is a pointer that can store the address of a function. A pointer to a variable is a pointer that can store the address of a variable. For example, `void (*p);` declares a pointer to a function, and `int *p;` declares a pointer to a variable.

14. How do you declare a pointer to a function in C?
A pointer to a function is declared by using parentheses followed by the pointer variable name. For example, `void (*p);` declares a pointer to a function named `p`.

A pointer to a function is a pointer that can store the address of a function. A pointer to a constant is a pointer that can store the address of a constant. For example, `void (*p);` declares a pointer to a function, and `const int *p;` declares a pointer to a constant.

16. How do you declare a pointer to a constant in C?
A pointer to a constant is declared by using the `const` keyword followed by the pointer variable name. For example, `const int *p;` declares a pointer to a constant integer variable named `p`.

17. What is the difference between a pointer to a function and a pointer to a variable in C?
