

Blackburne, 1997, p. 131: "Black and Shapere argue that [...] biological variation within a species is not a necessary condition for the existence of a species."

That is, Black and Shapere claim that, according to Black, it is possible to have a species without any biological variation. In fact, Blackburn, after comparing the former view with evolutionary and species concepts, concludes that it is not possible. In fact, Black is not really "opposed" to biological variation, since, clearly, according to his arguments, "biological variation" is a necessary condition for the existence of a species.

In addition, neither organismal nor developmental biology is a necessary condition for the existence of a species.

Finally, in other philosophical discussions and other arguments, the latter is not possible. — In other words, the existence of a species is not a necessary condition for the existence of a species.
