

REFLECTION PAPER-BAYANING THIRD WORLD

For us younger generations, we have been educated to respect Rizal as our national hero and some were given favorable information about him, along with the novels he composed, his accomplishments, and also how he died as a hero. His flaws did not weaken his bravery, however. I still honor, respect, and look up to Rizal despite the fact that he is not as "perfect" as such a national hero is supposed to be according to society. Because of his enormous achievements and tremendous legacy that are still relevant today, we are able to learn and take those learnings. About his life, work, and writings, we each have our own impressions, thoughts, and interpretations. Throughout anything, his controversy-filled life made it more interesting, and it only increased his popularity, not just in his own lifetime, but also in the present and in centuries to come. We had never raised any concerns about the bad things he had done in his life, and that's what this film is attempting to show to us viewers.

The film looked into Rizal's impact on contemporary Philippine history, while also trying to resolve concerns regarding his life which aren't frequently covered within Philippine history textbooks. The intention of the film was to show Rizal as a person, not as a symbol or a hero, as the film focused on those speculations that they wanted to unveil. Rizal undoubtedly left me questioning after watching the movie. Those particularly focused on myths, legends, and

In conclusion, "Warning: Your World" challenges the viewer to connect with the past to understand the present world. As well as the story of the story, other aspects, thoughts, and judgments that might influence the way we communicate regarding our own lives and our history. Through the viewer's self, we realize that these perceptions and the connection that continued in the past. I believe that I will easily add these to my understanding, relationships, and skills to people and my world around me. The story brings these factors to light, which the viewer will understand as changing our perceptions on things and making the world that more connected.
