Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The physical health assessment included measures of body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, and blood pressure. The psychological health assessment included measures of self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program resulted in a significant decrease in BMI, waist circumference, and blood pressure. The walking program also resulted in a significant increase in self-esteem and a significant decrease in anxiety and depression. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

These groups have a long-term, self-help focus, and they provide the necessary support. These programs have been shown to be effective in the long term (10,11).

These results suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated instrument to assess the impact of the intervention may be a more effective way to measure the impact of the intervention on the target population.

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to either an exercise group or a control group. The exercise group performed a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program. The control group did not exercise. The subjects were assessed for physical fitness at baseline and at 12 weeks. The results of the study showed that the exercise group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness at 12 weeks compared to the control group. The exercise group had significantly higher levels of cardiovascular fitness, muscular fitness, and flexibility. The control group had no change in physical fitness. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program can improve the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women.
