Experiment 1a: During the Ice Age

Researchers using ice cores have found evidence suggesting that the atmosphere was much warmer than today's. Scientists use various instruments that have old, simple methods of measuring the temperature. The first one was used around 1800 and was called the "thermometer". It was made by putting a glass tube with a bulb at the bottom. The bulb was filled with a liquid that expanded or contracted as the temperature changed. The liquid level in the tube was read against a scale.

Today, we have an instrument called a "thermistor" that is much more accurate. It is made of a material that changes its electrical resistance as the temperature changes. The resistance is measured with a circuit, and the temperature is calculated from the resistance. Thermistors are used in many places, including in the atmosphere.

Researchers have found evidence that the atmosphere was much warmer than today's. They have found that the temperature was about 10°C higher than today's. This is a big difference. Part 1a: Real-World Ecology

High-energy radiation from the Sun causes water to evaporate. Water evaporates from the surface of the ocean. The water vapor rises into the atmosphere. The water vapor then condenses into clouds. The clouds then release the water as rain. The rain falls back to the surface of the ocean. The water then evaporates again. This cycle is called the water cycle. It is a continuous process. The water cycle is important for life on Earth. It is the source of all the water that we use. The water cycle is also important for the climate. It helps to keep the temperature of the Earth from getting too hot or too cold.
