- Keywords: children, population, survey, risk, depression. Abstract: Existing studies suggest that the prevalence of depression among children has increased in recent years. This study examined the prevalence of depression among children in a large, representative sample of the U.S. population. Data from the National Comorbidity Survey Replication (NCS-R) were used to estimate the prevalence of depression among children aged 12-17. The results showed that the prevalence of depression among children was 1.5%.
