Blackburn's organization is a nationally prominent nonprofit think-tank. The organization was founded in 1963, under the name National Institute of Mental Health, and was transformed into the current name and mission following a successful 2004 merger with the American Psychiatric Association. The organization's 2008-2009 year-end report to the United States was quite bluntly titled "The Neuroscience Revolution and What It Means for Psychiatry and Mental Health Care." The report's executive summary, written by Blackburn, states that "the most important message of this report is that the field of neuroscience is rapidly changing the way we understand the brain, and this is having a profound impact on the way we think about mental illness. The report also discusses the challenges that neuroscience poses for the field of psychiatry, and the need for a new approach to the study of mental illness. The report concludes that the field of neuroscience is a rapidly changing field, and that the field of psychiatry must be able to keep pace with the changes in order to provide the best care for our patients."
