

18.2 Modern Evolutionary Classifications

Learning Objectives

- LO1 Explain the difference between phylogenetic classification and taxonomic classification.
- LO2 Distinguish between sister and outgroup relationships.
- LO3 Explain the use of DNA sequence in classification.

Learning Objectives

Phylogenetic use of the classification: The study of evolutionary relationships among organisms is called phylogenetics. Classifications based on evolutionary relationships is called phylogenetic classification or evolutionary classification.

- 1. Evolutionary classification places organisms into higher taxa based on shared derived traits (traits reflective and heritable from their common ancestors of any other group). The higher the rank, the further back in time all of its members sharing common ancestor.
- 2. In the system, organisms are placed into groups called clades. A clade is a group of species that includes a single common ancestor and all descendants of that ancestor. It does not include anything else. group that include all species that are descended from a common ancestor, and descendants are species that are not descended from that common ancestor.

Cladogram: A cladogram is a diagram that shows how species or higher taxa are related to each other. A cladogram shows their evolutionary history in branching, hierarchical representation.

- 1. In a cladogram, the place where the vertical lineage splits is called a node, or synap. Nodes represent the point where two things first shared a common ancestor.
- 2. The bottom of the diagram is the root, represents the common ancestor of all the organisms in the cladogram.
- 3. Cladistics usually refers to specific methods, or theories. A cladistic approach is a way that refers to the way most taxonomists describe all a particular clade and not just an subset of the clade.

DNA in Classification: All organisms have DNA. Because DNA is so variable across all forms of life, the molecule can be compared to different species. In general, the more shared genetic features two species have, the more closely the species share a common ancestor. Similar traits are found among closely related taxa.
