

Lesson 18: Similar Triangles in Circle-Secant (or Circle-Secant-Tangent) Diagrams

Student Outcomes

- Students find missing lengths in circle secant or secant-tangent diagrams.

Lesson Overview

The opening task for students involves a circle secant diagram that involves similar triangles. In this lesson, students continue their study of similar figures and circles, but this time an emphasis is on finding the means to segment lengths and their relationships to each other. In particular, the teacher should allow students to discover the segments formed by intersecting secant lines and their relationship to each other. In particular, the teacher should challenge them to derive the formula that they developed in the Lesson 17 exploration.

The Lesson Overview (see below) includes work on circle secant diagrams involving segment lengths by writing geometric relationships into solvable equations.

Classroom

Opening Exercise (7 minutes)

Students recognize secant angles and use a ratio of the two parts of the angle. The exercise, which should be completed individually, asks students to write the two angles and their segments, recognize and then find the needed ratios, and then write an equation to solve for the unknown segment length.

Opening Exercise

Write the two angles and the segments that they are divided into.

18

18.1. The secant line is divided into two segments by the circle.

19

19.1. The secant line is divided into two segments by the circle. The segments are labeled with variables.
