Domestic Policy:

- Nixon, a Republican, moved the nation in a more conservative direction.
- He believed that federal social programs were often inefficient, and that most social problems were best dealt with at the local level.
- Under his policy of New Federalism, Nixon reversed the trend of increasing federal control by turning some federal revenues over to state governments.

Foreign Policy Under Nixon:

- Pursued a policy of "Vietnamization," shifting the fighting from American troops to the South Vietnamese Army.
 - In 1973, Nixon and the North Vietnamese agreed to the Paris Peace Accords, and U.S. troops were withdrawn from Vietnam.
- Ever since the Communist Revolution in China in 1949, U.S. leaders refused to establish diplomatic relations with the Communist government.
 - Nixon made a breakthrough in relations when he visited Communist China and took the first steps towards a normalization of diplomatic relations with Communist China.
- Nixon also introduced a policy of détente - a relaxing of strained relations - with the Soviet Union. In 1973, Nixon visited Moscow and signed the SALT I Accord, which limited the development of certain types of missile systems.
