Abstract

While Article 5 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child requires states to respect parents' responsibilities to provide 'appropriate' direction and guidance to their children, Article 18 also proclaims that 'the best interests of the child will be [the parents'] basic concern'. But how can this be done if, as is widely accepted, the 'best interests' standard is too indeterminate safely to allow courts to substitute their assessment of children's interests for those of a child's parents? This reason for privatising such decisions has been reinforced by concerns over the extent of public expenditure on court involvement in and legal aid for such issues, with the possible result of withdrawal of the law from this process. This article argues that there are inherent risks in leaving the arrangements for children of separating parents entirely in the hands of the parents, and considers various ways in which such risks might be reduced.

1 Introduction

While there is legitimate discussion about what direction and guidance which parents and some others are responsible to provide their children is 'appropriate' and 'consistent with [their] evolving capacities' in accordance with Article 5 of the UNCRC, Article 18 seems to establish an overall obligation that states shall 'use their best efforts' to ensure that, in doing that, 'the best interests of the child will be [the parents'] basic concern'. This obligation is inevitably somewhat imprecise. Tobin and Seow (2019) suggest it should be

A Question of Commitment Thomas Waddock,2020-04-09 With the adoption of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child 1989 commentators began to situate the evolution of the status of children within the context of the property to persons trajectory that other human rights stories had followed In the first edition of A Question of Commitment editors R Brian Howe and Katherine Covell provided a template of analysis for understanding this evolution They identified three overlapping stages of development as children transitioned from being regarded as objects to subjects in their own right social laissez faire paternalistic protection and children s rights In the social laissez faire stage children are regarded as objects and largely as the property of parents In the paternalistic protection stage children are seen as vulnerable and in need of protection The children s rights stage lays emphasis on children as rights bearers as individuals in their own right with entitlements In this second edition new essays assess the extent to which children s rights have been incorporated into their respective areas of policy and law The authors draw conclusions about what the situation reveals about the status of children in Canada Overall many challenges remain on the pathway to full recognition and citizenship
