Abstract— Consumption of energy accounts for a significant portion of the costs associated with carrying out any activity. Cloud computing has seen spectacular development in network technology because of the advancements in communication technology, the expansion of Internet usage, and the solution of issues on a bigger scale. The NP-hard challenge of scheduling and allocating resources to meet the needs of users in the Cloud has been referred to as a scheduling problem. For this reason, balancing the load is critical to overcoming all the issues listed above. Researchers have compared a wide range of load balancing techniques in the cloud to improve different performance metrics and help load balancing. The study also describes relation between green cloud computing and load balancing.

Keywords—Cloud Computing, Load Balancing, Cloud optimization, Cloudsion

I. INTRODUCTION

Cloud computing is exploding in network technology, spurred on by advances in communication technology, the rise of Internet usage, and the ability to solve issues pertaining to scaling and global reach by providing hardware and software solutions to all users alike. Tech giants like Google, Amazon, and Microsoft already have cloud-based services for users worldwide. From simple 'PaaS' solutions to advanced machine learning algorithms for optimization, Cloud computing has it all [1]. Appropriate load balancing is one of the critical factors that help customers meet their demands and lower their capital expenses when dealing with reduced workloads.

In simpler terms reducing the number of servers for your organization and then dealing with this sudden change by balancing and distributing the traffic amongst the reduced compute capacity is load balancing [2].

The same concept is applied when the workload sees an upsurge in traffic. The researchers in this discipline have seen load balancing as a more critical and central focus. Load distribution has been taken into consideration for both physical and virtual hosts.

Green cloud computing entails planning, production, and using digital spaces in a way to decrease its effect on the climate. A green cloud arrangement could save energy at any point as well as fundamentally decrease venture functional expenses [3]. Green cloud computing is impacted significantly by choosing an appropriate load balancer. The advantages of green cloud computing are given in Table I.

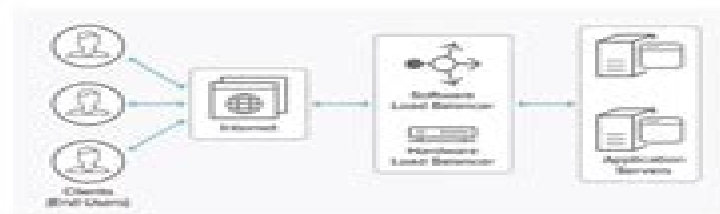

Fig. 1. A Simple Load Balancer

The balancing technique disperses the burden dynamically among all nodes with an equal number [4]. A simple load balancer can be seen in figure 1.

Cloud-based load balancing has been referred to as Load Balancing as a Service (LBS) (BaaS). Static Balancing and Dynamic Balancing are the names of two load balancing variants. For stable surroundings and homogeneous systems, static balancing is regarded as a fixed feature of the system. Because of its adaptability and efficiency in both homogeneous and heterogeneous situations, dynamic balancing algorithms have become a preferred method of balancing systems [5].

The demand that has been growing in regards to the infrastructure of the cloud has been leading to a type of increment that was so dramatic in regards to the consumption of the energy [6]. The desire that several were having in regards to the power has been significantly contribution in regards to the footprint with the help of the carbon of the environment. Green Cloud computing has been also named as the Green Information Technology, and also it has been considered as the solution that is having the potential for aiding in regards to the reduction of the consumption of energy. Green Cloud computing has been considered as the study in regards to design, produce as well as also use of the digital devices in regards to the way that has been reducing their type of impacts in terms of the environment [7]. Green Cloud computing has been a solution that has been giving permission towards the users for the utilization of all the benefits that the cloud storage is giving them at the time of the decreasing in regards to the adverse type of effect that can be
