Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a control group (CON) or a training group (TRN). The TRN group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of low-intensity aerobic exercise. The CON group remained sedentary. The HR and EE were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training period. The TRN group showed a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the CON group. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve cardiovascular fitness and increase energy expenditure in sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Ground moisture conditions will negatively affect the rate of decomposition. For example, the length of the season may vary depending on the soil moisture availability.
- The soil pH level will negatively affect the rate of change. The pH level is related to the presence of a buffering capacity, which is the ability of the soil to resist changes in its acidity. Soils with a low buffering capacity (those with a pH of 4.5 or less) are more likely to experience a change in pH over a year.
