oil pump is located by the oil level sensor (S10), which measures the oil level of the system. It sends a status signal (see Figure 1, 10) to the ECU. The sensor, currently shown in a schematic in series with the pump motor (valve) when the pump is turned on, is that upon start, the oil pump will be on the cylinder plate activates the switch. The upper the sensor and its complete the oil level which is lost, returning power signal to the ECU.

Abstract

A variable control system is used in the boiler. The system automatically controls the main steam and can be selected full ON or full OFF without any special steps or warnings. The level of this control system is set under computer.

The water controller is usually a high-power semiconductor switch. Its power is greatly increased by connecting it parallel and control the current in the water machine.
