Abstract

The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between two groups of men who had been exposed to asbestos during their working lives. The first group consisted of 60 men who had worked in asbestos-related occupations and the second group consisted of 60 men who had not. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the first group than in the second group.
