the past decade, however, have not changed. The average number of children born to a woman has remained the same, with only a slight increase in the past few years. The average number of children born to a woman in the United States is 2.1, which is slightly above the replacement level of 2.0. This is due to the fact that women are having children at a later age than in the past, which increases the number of children they are likely to have. The average number of children born to a woman in the United States is 2.1, which is slightly above the replacement level of 2.0. This is due to the fact that women are having children at a later age than in the past, which increases the number of children they are likely to have.
