PIR sensor camera and memory The other team focused on the design described in this document a mesh network subsystem including TX RX hardware to transmit images through the system to a PC At the core of our proof of concept design was the ZigBee wireless protocol which is designed for use in low cost low power mesh networks The EM260 Radio Control Module RCM designed by Ember Corporation was selected to utilize the ZigBee protocol The module offers a complete wireless solution for designing low power ZigBee applications The EM260 RCM was combined with the MSP430F1611 microcontroller using the Serial Peripheral Interface SPI to create a fully functional camera node and base station Figure 1 illustrates the general system architecture of the camera node The base station architecture is the same except it did not contain the camera PIR sensor or memory and was connected to a PC Figure 1 Camera node At the conclusion of the project the teams were able to provide the Enterprise Research Centre with a proof of concept wireless security camera system The final proof of concept system consisted of two camera nodes and a base station that together formed a functional wireless mesh network Each node has a battery life of up to one year and has a transmission range of up to 90 meters The system supports many nodes and has the ability to add or remove nodes from the network providing the system the capability of covering variable surveillance areas All of the documentation on the wireless security camera system has been left with the ERC for future development The teams are hopeful that research continues on this system and it is able to come to the market in the near future to aid in the reduction of car park crime not only in Ireland but throughout the world
