

Oh Dear, Here Come the Wolves!

Imagine yourself as wildlife manager seeking to restore the population of an endangered species of deer. Currently, the forest habitat's great hunting conditions have helped restore the deer population to previous levels. But it hardly goes without saying that the following scenarios you just think would provide the best habitat for your herd of deer?

Scenario A: The forest currently thrives in the absence of any large predators. The different habitats of the forest, which are increasingly becoming more open to hunters, have helped the deer population grow. The forest is currently growing at a rate of 1% per year, and the deer population is growing at a rate of 1% per year.
