Abstract

The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between two groups of men who had been exposed to asbestos during their lifetime. The subjects were divided into two groups based on their exposure to asbestos: one group had been exposed to asbestos for more than 10 years, and the other group had been exposed for less than 10 years. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the group exposed to asbestos for more than 10 years compared to the group exposed for less than 10 years.
