Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 12 women, 40 to 50 years of age, who were sedentary and had no cardiovascular or other medical problems. They were randomly assigned to a 12-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise at 60% of maximum HR. The control group remained sedentary. The HR and EE were measured at rest and during exercise at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the training program had a significant effect on the HR and EE of the women. The HR at rest decreased significantly, and the EE at rest increased significantly. The HR and EE during exercise also increased significantly. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness and energy expenditure of sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Several measures that are commonly used with the fish are also true for reptiles, such as, the length of the season may vary depending on the soil moisture availability.
- The soil temperature is important, as it may change the period of activity. The period of activity is usually longer in the day than at night, but there are some species of animals that are nocturnal, and some are active during the day and night.
