Meester, F. Pincioli, 2012-12-06 A database is in principle just a large collection of related or separate data systematically stored in a computer. It should be possible for the data to be easily entered into the database structure and afterwards also easily read, corrected and processed. The later analysis of data from such a database is greatly enhanced by the availability of special query languages and statistical analysis programs not only for serial items but also for large combinations of data. Query languages such as SQL Structured Query Language developed especially for these purposes make databases easily accessible also to researchers who may not be very well versed in computer programming. The cardiologist, medical clinician and researcher of today is of necessity confronted more and more with computer based data storage. Interest is of course focused primarily on the clinical use of such databases more than on the technical design itself except for some very specific personalized applications. For the latter approach there are at present many software packages commercially available especially designed for use in the personal computer environment. This book is comprised out of a number of contributions by various authors with differing backgrounds and from many different countries. The editors, being a cardiologist and an information scientist, have strived to achieve an equilibrium between these two fields. The chapters in this book form a cross section of the many approaches to database design and implementation in the area of cardiology.

Trauma Informatics Kimball I. Maull, Jeffrey S. Augenstein, 2012-12-06 Information and the technology to rapidly transmit, analyze, document and disperse this information are increasing arithmetically if not logarithmically. Arguably no discipline better exemplifies this trend than medicine. It can be further argued that care of the trauma patient is one of the better examples of informatics and the potential benefit to the health professionals who care for these patients. Maull and Augenstein have provided us with a primer on informatics and its use in trauma care. The subject matter is timely and covers the gamut of trauma care from prehospital to rehabilitation. Who will benefit from trauma informatics? A simple answer would be anyone who takes care of trauma patients. From a broader perspective, however, at least three examples illustrate how trauma informatics can be used today to exert a positive effect on patient outcome. The first example is care of combat casualties including battlefield resuscitation, evacuation, acute care and ultimate return to the continental United States. Current technology is such that via global positioning satellite a corpsman could transmit to a remote area the vital signs and pertinent physical findings of a combat casualty. Furthermore, the location of the corpsman and the casualty would be precisely known and consultation and destination disposition would be possible. The injured person, when admitted to a combat support hospital, could be continuously monitored and additional remote consultation obtained. Shipbuilding &
