Answer the following questions:

1. Describe the hydrologic cycle, components, and processes. The hydrologic cycle is a continuous process that moves water around the planet. It is driven by the sun's energy, which causes water to evaporate from the surface of the ocean and land. The water vapor then condenses into clouds, which release precipitation in the form of rain or snow. This precipitation then flows back to the ocean or infiltrates the ground, where it can be stored for a long time before being released back into the cycle.
2. Describe erosion, and the following erosion parts: head, channel, meander, oxbow lake, and floodplain. Erosion is the process of wearing away the Earth's surface. It is caused by the movement of water, wind, and ice. The head of a river is the point where it begins to flow. The channel is the path that the water takes as it flows. A meander is a bend in the river's path. An oxbow lake is a body of water that has been cut off from the main river. A floodplain is the area of land that is flooded by the river when it overflows its banks.
3. Describe drainage basins and divides. A drainage basin is the area of land that drains water into a single body of water. A divide is the line that separates two drainage basins. It is the highest point of land between two bodies of water.
4. Describe drainage patterns: dendritic, radial, rectangular, and trellis. Dendritic drainage patterns are the most common. They are characterized by a main channel with many smaller tributaries that join it at right angles. Radial drainage patterns are found on volcanic cones. They are characterized by channels that radiate out from the center of the cone. Rectangular drainage patterns are found in areas where the rock is made of blocks. They are characterized by channels that follow the joints in the rock. Trellis drainage patterns are found in areas where the rock is made of layers. They are characterized by channels that follow the layers of the rock.
5. Describe river erosion, transportation, and deposition. River erosion is the process of wearing away the riverbed and banks. It is caused by the movement of water and sediment. River transportation is the process of moving sediment from one place to another. It is caused by the movement of water. River deposition is the process of dropping sediment. It is caused by the water slowing down or changing direction.
6. Describe alluvial fans, river terraces, and oxbow lakes. Alluvial fans are formed by the deposition of sediment at the mouth of a river. River terraces are formed by the deposition of sediment on the sides of a river. Oxbow lakes are formed by the deposition of sediment at the end of a river branch.
7. Describe how a river is controlled by its watershed, topography, and climate. A river's watershed is the area of land that drains water into it. Topography is the shape of the land. Climate is the weather conditions in an area. All three factors control how a river flows.
8. Describe the mechanisms causing various erosion, deposition, and sedimentation processes. Erosion is caused by the movement of water, wind, and ice. Deposition is caused by the water slowing down or changing direction. Sedimentation is the process of dropping sediment.
9. Describe the different ways that sediment is transported by a river: bed load, suspended load, and dissolved load. Bed load is the sediment that is carried along the bottom of the river. Suspended load is the sediment that is carried in the water. Dissolved load is the sediment that is carried in the water as ions.
